David Bond is an international facilitator, executive coach and retreat leader, who works as a catalyst for substantive leadership change. He has worked in the Americas, Asia, Africa and Europe and draws on over 20 years global experience with executives, senior leadership teams and organizations in transition. David is particularly skilled at working with the complex, relational aspects of leadership effectiveness and team change: promoting inclusive collaboration, harvesting multiple perspectives, establishing a thinking environment, overcoming immunity to change, and leveraging diversity. He strives to model mindful leadership driven by deep purpose and the belief that serving the common good serves organizations and businesses.

David is based in the USA; he works independently and in association with major business schools and leadership consultancies. He is a senior consultant with Kramer Leadership and Liz De Wet Leadership Development, a facilitator, educator and coach on a range of courses and programs at Kenan-Flagler Business School, the Smith Leadership Initiative and Carolina Athletics. David's current focus is in Healthcare and Higher Education, where he is playing an active role in training and facilitating 'Inclusive and courageous conversations about Race and Diversity'.

David's executive clients and program participants have come from a variety of organizations and sectors, such as the Duke University Health System, Johnson & Johnson, Colleges of Fenway, the United Nations, Public Sector agencies in South Africa, Duke Corporate Education, the National Health Service (United Kingdom), the German Development Cooperation (Government), Abu Dhabi Civil Service, Ernst and Young, Shell, Philips, Unilever, Nestle, Barclays, Heineken, Gulf Drilling International, World Youth Organizations and multi-sector collaborative projects. Dave has also had international leadership roles in the educational sector. David is an internationally accredited executive coach and holds an MSC, MA (cum laude), and MSSci.
